The draw-string dress has arrived fashion-wise. You will probably look very good in one if you are tall and have a perfect figure. This style is phenomenally easy to make if you have a hand with a needle and thread.

The draw-string has been adapted to all occasions — from morning to evening. For you girls (with a perfect figure) who love to knit, there is an easy-to-follow pattern on the market.

The high waist version of the draw-string completely escapes us. However, for anyone who is interested they are certainly high style. They are said to look charming for evening or afternoon parties.

Lucky is the girl who invested in a smart leather coat two years ago (when they first became big fashion news). The leather coat is "better than ever" this season. The price is a little higher in the better lines and leathers.

There are a number of cheaper versions to be had. Go easy here because when buying leather goods, you get exactly what you pay for. What looks like a million dollars when you buy it can look like two cents after a few wearings if good leather is not under the coloring A poor grade of leather, not cured with care and time, will wrinkle and will not take and hold color.

...al Students Report on Prize-Winning Trip to Syracuse

...following account of their re... trip to the National ...ding Contest in Syracuse, ...rk, was written by Laura ...and Gene Carson, of Appo... High School:

...little company spent the ...part of Sunday and Mon...driving along the well-kept ...n Highway in Canada, catch...fleeting glimpses of sparkling ...Ontario on one side and watching the ever-present purple Canadian mountains on the other. Entering the United States, we observed the clear waters of the St. Lawrence River reflecting the serenity of the Thousand Islands as we passed overhead on the great arched bridges.

"Monday night found us at our long anticipated destination, Syracuse, New York. As we arose early Tuesday morning to join young people from eleven other states at the Youth Breakfast, we found ourselves among friendly and interesting people. The nourishing breakfast and fine fellowship helped to start us on an activity-packed day and calmed us for the contest to be held later.

For our lavish banquet Tuesday night, we were guests of the sponsor of the Virginia delegation, A & P Food Stores. Toward the end of the banquet, tension began to mount as the winners of the various contests were announced. You can bet that the members of the Virginia team were greatly excited to hear their names called as the first-place winners. The surprise and pleasure of winning the egg grading contest was soon forgotten in the merriment of the dance which followed the banquet.

"Wednesday morning was spent wandering through the intricate layout of commercial exhibits in the War Memorial Building of Syracuse. That afternoon in Cayuga the group toured Beacon Milling Company and their experimental poultry farm, after which a delicious chicken barbeque was served.

"Thursday morning we drove through the carefully landscaped campus of Cornell University at Ithica, N. Y. Later in the day we spent three fascinating hours in the awe-inspiring museum of Corning Glass Center, Corning, N. Y. Then Friday morning, while driving by parts of the Gettysburg battlefields we realized the time would not be long before we would be back in our beloved Virginia.

"On the last leg of our journey home, it happened! Mr. Smith, refusing to take our warning, ran out of gas two miles from a service station. What fun we had!

"As the travel-weary quartet approached Appomattox, spirits mounted at the thought of seeing dear friends after a week's separation, and at the thought of getting some home-cooked meals."

CITES VIRGINIA PAINT LAW

A subscriber suggests that this newspaper call attention to Virginia's Paint Law. This law requires a Virginia State License, and our subscriber says that it is a good idea to ask to see that license when a stranger offers to paint a farm barn or other building. He reports that there have been reports of out-of-state groups using improper materials resulting in inferior jobs. We are glad to pass on this information.

APPLE CROP OF HIGH QUALITY NOW MOVING TO THE MARKET

A crop of more than 9,000,000 bushels of "exceptionally high quality" apples is now being harvested in Virginia.

And Howard A. Rollins, Jr., associate horticulturist at VPI, has some tips for fruit producers for top profits.

He says picking the crop is one of the most important steps in fruit production. It does little good to raise top-quality apples only to have them badly bruised before they get to the consumer. If pickers are properly supervised, it is possible for fruit to arrive at the packing house relatively free from bruises.

He advises also to check the way the fruit is loaded on the wagons in the orchard. See that fruit is not bounced around on the trucks as it is hauled to the pack shed. Avoid rough handling as apples are unloaded at the packing house and emptied onto the grader. Check with your packing-house operator to see that no bruising takes place in grading and packing.

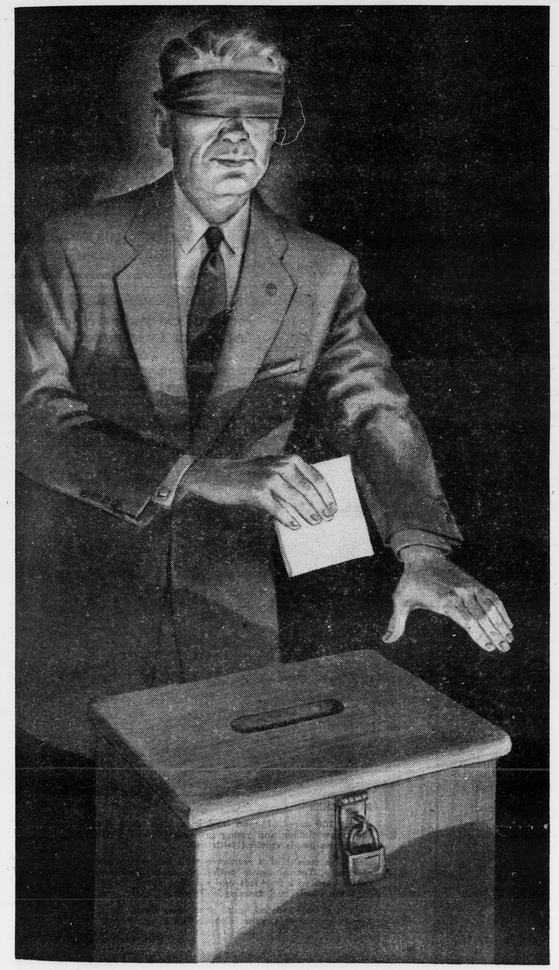
Now is the time to evaluate your packing operations, along with picking and handling operations, to see if you need to make some changes before another season. Bruised fruit eats into profits.

Now is also a good time to evaluate your 1956 spray program, Rollins says. Check over your cull fruit. A close examination of the culls should give some ideas as to where the spray program may have failed.

Don't fail to keep on the lookout for signs of mouse activities in the orchard. These pests can cause a lot of damage and should not be allowed to build up in an orchard.

Rollins says the crop is maturing well, but about seven to 10 days later than normal. Fruit finish is good, even in those areas that were plagued by spring frosts. Picking is proceeding well in most orchards. Migrant pickers - Bahamians and Jamaicans — are handling a sizeable part of the apple crop this season.

Come to Appomattox Friday,



VOTE

but don't vote in the dark!

In the last national election, more than 61 million Americans went to the polls and voted — and the nation felt almost jubilant that so many people had raised such a mighty vote.

But those early Americans who gave us the right to cast a vote might not have been so jubilant — if they could have been here to see that one person out of every three who possessed that right, failed to use it.

This is government of all the people, government for all the people, and it should be government by all the people — not just two out of every three.

Yes, the nation wants and needs big votes in the U. S. A. — but big votes alone aren't enough.

Above all, there is an urgent necessity for thinking voting, too.

The nation wants and needs enthusiastic voters — but wants them also to be voters who know that voting is a responsibility as well as a right; who have informed themselves about the issues, learned what the candidates stand for, studied their backgrounds and evaluated their abilities impartially.

The man who doesn't vote is like the man who "lays off from work" — and the man who votes without informing himself is like the man who shows up for work, but has no training for the job.

Between now and November 6, inform yourself as best you can.

Then go confidently to your polls and vote.

Vote — but don't vote in the dark!
